FEATURED NEWS

The company's latest news is huge. The eVTOL dealer has committed to delivering, via an exclusive distribution agreement signed on September 18th, as many as 10,000 Land Rotor Sportsters by 2030, a deal worth up to USD700 million (each vehicle costs around USD70,000). At present, no money is changing hands.

So what and who is Land Rotor?

flyingmag.com who first broke this story, explains, "Land Rotor's business model is one of the most intriguing in the entire AAM space. At the moment, it's twofold. The company is working toward mass producing sports recreation vehicles for the consumer market, both for off-road and "street legal" use cases. Before that, though, it will focus on a surprising core market: amusement parks."

It continues, "Orlando, Florida, is an amusement park goer's dream. But nestled between two of the city's top destinations is a ride like no other. Sandwiched by Universal Studios and SeaWorld, the Drone Ride, currently under development, will be operated by Orlando-based flying sports car manufacturer Land Rotor. The attraction will feature a prototype of the company's advanced air mobility (AAM) Sportster — unveiled in full last week — tethered to the ground inside a building. With an audience already in place at these amusement park venues, Land Rotor is able to install its tech and immediately get eyes on it."
